You may be unaware, unless you have seen "Fashions for Men," how entertaining life really is among the baberdasheries of Budapest. There, in an atmosphere of smart Hungarian wearing apparel, the lowly trades-pecons love, suffer, scheme and sacrifice, roving thereby the possession of souls above the neckwear and halfhosiery. Interesting and varied characters are there to be found in studies ranging from the super-benevolent proprictor to the mean little salesman who bsconds with his wife and his treasure. Humor, too, is present; and in "Fashions for Men" it is pointed out for you with many a twinkle by Mr. Molnar, the author, and Mr. Glaser, nis American adjutant. We should

is shown for him by Paula, the most beautiful of all employees (Miss Helen Gahagan)—though, for a time, she is money mad and an intrigante. When the dotty Mr. Juhasz accepts the offer of his benefactor, the count, to superintend some cheese factories in the rural districts, Paula goes with 'him, much to his delight. But propinquity to the ex-haberdasher is not her purpose. Desiring jewels and motor ears, she has designs upon, the nobleman, who is arrorous and fifty-six. Juhasz is just a screen.

This count, as played by Mr. Edwin Nicander, is a happy element in the comedy.
